ACADEMIC ATTIRE

The colorful attire worn by graduates, faculty, and gown, the graduates and their professors are part of a long tradition that dates back to Paris and Bologna, Italy, to Oxford and Cambridge, England, in the days of their Catholic glory.

The exact origins of several parts of the academic garb are a bit of a mystery. Because medieval students enjoyed the status of cleric during their university years, one might guess that their attire found its inspiration in the clerical dress of medieval times. The gown seems to be an imitation of the skullcap of days when tonsured heads needed protection against the drafts of medieval classrooms.

Academic attire began to appear on U.S. campuses in the late 1890s. Since that time, its use has become universal for solemn university functions, and its pattern is highly uniform.

THE GOWNS

The gowns are three in number and styling. That of the bachelor is a yoked, closed-front garment has sleeves long and closed but slit just above the elbow. The gown of the doctor has full, bell-shaped sleeves. Only the doctor's gown is trimmed – with velvet panels down the front and three velvet bars on each sleeve.

THE HOOD

When the skullcap was introduced, the hood was retained but detached and worn much as it is today. Each degree (master's and doctoral) has its special hood, which varies in length and, for the doctor, also in pattern. The color or colors lining the hood are those of the college or university that granted the wearer's degree. For example, Saint Louis is of white. The colored velvet binding or edging of the hood, in different widths for the master and doctor, is also uniform.
